Martin Robertson

Summer Vision

A wild rose lifting from the hedge-top hooks its way upwards, on and up, hangs its constellations improbably in the light-fingered green of an ash-tree, catches the look, lifts the heart to a still starburst in the night of thought.

 $This poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The {\tt http://rtnl.org.u$