

Martin Robertson

“Gale is Dead”

May we assign a cause?
—who cannot be content with a cruel pattern of stars, Venus shivering under the Scorpion’s tail, Saturn’s black frost poisoning the sun. . .

Put it as you will,
the christening-sisters meant to give her, if not all, much—looks, a quick mind, a feeling heart, and one thing which doubles those,

the gift which makes them known, felt. But the figure on the other side, rejected, black, said “These she shall have. But they shall be no use.”

Dress it how you may;
in plain words, what no one gave this child was love. Without love all those happy things are mockery.
She had to spoil herself, and spoiled die.