Martin Robertson

[We lived and sang, my brother]

We lived and sang, my brother, and watched the days go by, and when death came among us we watched our brothers die. But as we watched, our singing died too upon our breath, for dying kills, my brother, as certainly as death.

 $This poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The {\tt http://rtnl.org.u$