

[We lived and sang, my brother]

Martin Robertson

We lived and sang, my brother, and watched the days go by,
and when death came among us we watched our brothers die.
But as we watched, our singing died too upon our breath, for dying kills, my brother, as certainly as death.