Martin Robertson

The West of Ireland

Gorse and rock and bog lap the wall and wind hurls the sea in the home's face. Who bred here could suppose himself to possess of his cramped acres more than a squatter's tenure? where the harsh landlord may distrain on all, the holding dissipate like sea-spray to thin air.

 $This poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The {\tt http://rtnl.org.u$