Martin Robertson

Beauty

Drink (your fill you never can) beauty of earth, skill of visionary man. Man, who knows from nature how to kill and breeds in his own breast, sows incontinently, noisomer ill, yet pursues beauty, and is blest. For all our wickedness, our blank stupidity, beauty is ours and the earth's still.

 $This poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The {\tt http://rtnl.org.u$