

Martin Robertson

Great Britain

Once she held half the world in fee;
for evil and for good, a power.
But nothing lasts indefinitely.
She fails now in her fated hour,
hanging herself in her own rope.
We shall not see her like again?
Well, that's too much, I think, to hope.
And yet her death-throes give me pain.