

Martin Robertson

Epoch

Right we should leave in June,
the hedges lit with roses.
The years of the rose are done.

Each year the flowering briar has touched this reach of life with a singular character.

The beauty of the flower,
enough of course in itself,
is informed with so much more,

teasing the plaintive self:
Look backward down your life
for the constellated roses.