

Martin Robertson

The Difference

Leaves on a felled tree do not drift away
to earth and slow decay—cling unnaturally
shrivelling on their ties, dying as the tree dies.

Autumn's little death,
winter's image of the unresponsive grave, are changed in spring's breath.
Stripped trees put green on.
Not the felled one.