Martin Robertson

Naples

St. Januarius's blood froths cold in its gold-mounted phial. In canyons of the high-slummed hill sick children sell themselves for food. Song... and blue sea... and on the blue distance, Tiberius's isle. Blood spurts, dries soon... but hot blood still reliquifies the sun-dried blood.

 $This poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The poem is reprinted from Now and Then, the website devoted to the poetry of Martin Robertson, at {\tt http://rtnl.org.uk/now_and_then/linearity}. The {\tt http://rtnl.org.u$